

"The secret to the most powerful remote-viewing technique lies in how far you travel into the deeper levels of your mind. Unless you reach the higher levels ... your mind will be subject to sensing information from the beta level, a level of mental awareness that is greatly limited."

According to Joseph McMoneagle, remote-viewing is "possible and accurate outside the boundaries of time." McMoneagle was one of the original officers recruited for Project Star Gate; McMoneagle was 'Remote Viewer #1' in the U.S. Army's psychic intelligence unit at Fort Meade, Maryland. He believes to have remote-viewed into the past, present, and future; he has even predicted future events. McMoneagle has claimed to have remote-viewed a Chinese nuclear facility, the Red Brigades, the Iranian hostage crisis, and Muammar Qadhafi. He also claims to have predicted the location and existence of the Soviet Typhoon-class submarine in 1979. In mid-January of 1980, satellite photographs confirmed these predictions.

In addition to that, McMoneagle worked with Dean Radin, an acclaimed parapsychologist, at the Conscious Research Laboratory at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas "to seek patentable ideas via remote-viewing for a future machine Radin conceived." Remote-viewing has even been used in missing person cases across the country in places like San Francisco, New York, and Chicago. McMoneagle claims to have used remote-viewing in such cases, as well as employing remote-viewing as somewhat of a time machine to make various observations including the origin of the human species.

On his website, McMoneagle explains one of his remote-viewing experiments conducted at Pete's Harbor Restaurant near Palo Alto, California. This experiment is much like the one conducted at RSE this year, both of which proved to be successful.

So how did McMoneagle successfully come to these results? "I was taken to a windowless room approximately one hour before target time. After my seclusion, a 'beacon' or target person randomly selected an envelope from a set of 75 possible locations and departed the building. After leaving the building (at some point in route), the beacon person opened the envelope and proceeded to the target location indicated, Pete's Harbor Restaurant. At a pre-arranged time, designed to follow the arrival of the beacon person at the targeted site, I was asked to describe in as much detail as possible where the beacon person was located." McMoneagle attributes his accuracy to years and years of remote-viewing.

Mary Rivas, a spiritual writer and consultant, describes how to most effectively use remote-viewing techniques. Remote-viewing opens up all four levels of mind awareness: beta, alpha, theta, and delta. "The secret to the most powerful remote viewing technique lies in how far you travel into the deeper levels of your mind. Unless you reach the higher levels of heightened consciousness, your mind will be subject to sensing information from the beta level, a level of mental awareness that is greatly limited. Remote viewing techniques that teach you how to access theta will be far more effective in teaching you remote viewing. That's because theta is the closest level to the ultimate universal mind, it's the direct doorway into delta. The delta level operates outside time and space; it is infinity."

Dr. Courtney Brown of the Farsight Institute explains the benefits of recognizing the practice of remote-viewing. "Humanity will increasingly appreciate the more complicated nature of physical reality, and the fact that sudden and nonlinear changes do happen to our planet and environment; humanity will begin to more fully understand the connection between events in space and life on Earth; humanity will more rapidly embrace some of the more profound implications of remote-viewing research with respect to extraterrestrial life; humanity will begin to realize that it is not without a measure of control in its march forward in time; and humanity will continue to have faith in science and scientific leadership, and the path forward will be guided by reason."

The experiences of our 1600 hundred students, along with the research of Schwartz and his team, prove that further study of remote-viewing can yield valuable results to those who seek enlightenment and nontraditional studies. Remote-viewing is about a desire to be a pioneer of the new world, seeking the visions of the future.

in the advancing student, about eight hundred at the campus and eight hundred more online participated in an advanced exercise in February. The students were divided into nine groups and asked to focus on a specific envelope and draw their impressions on paper. Only later were they told the contents of the envelope, predicting world events, with each envelope listing a different month to forecast.

Some of the amazing predictions for the month of March that came true included a drawing of Big Ben and the London clock tower, which foreshadowed a news story discussing the renaming of Big Ben on March 23rd. In addition to that, a drawing by actress Linda Evans showed the cross of the Coptic Church for March in the Middle East. The Pope of the Coptic Orthodox Church in Egypt, Shenouda III, passed away in March.

In one of the groups marked with 'April' on the inside of the envelope, a student drew a photo of the Statue of Liberty with a large plane flying directly above. On April 26th, the Space Shuttle Enterprise flew over the Statue of Liberty on the back of a Boeing 747. Additional accurate results from the February retreat include:

- Tornadoes in the Midwest and Northern U.S. in March
- CMEs reaching the Earth in March which happened several times between March 5-13th around the world
- Two predictions about the slow sinking of Venice, Italy, in March which correlated with a new study published the same month by Scripps Institution of Oceanography describing this phenomenon
- Incidents involving water and flooding in April in Canada, Texas, Australia, British Columbia, and the Caribbean
- Triangle-shaped UFO sightings worldwide
